What: OHS and social sustainability

Who: Phil Lovelock, Senior Health, Safety and Wellbeing Consultant and Policy Advisor, Victorian Chamber of Commerce and Industry

Details: As the concept of social sustainability becomes more important, businesses and organisations are treating people more as an asset to be valued and looked after.

How can OHS practitioners support their businesses in building and maintaining social sustainability? Phil Lovelock has some answers when he presents a model in a lunchtime Zoom talk on 9th August.

He will outline a 5-point action plan with elements that reflect the growth and maturity of OHS as a profession. It will cover people, workplace environment, systems, the organisation and external stakeholders.

It is a new, broader approach to the OHS role that will be useful for anyone facing this challenge.
