What: When a company is small and risks are high

Who: Ben Thomson, Safety Manager, Flight Academy Australia

Details: Aviation demands particularly sound safety management systems and behaviours. Ben Thomson, Safety Manager for Flight Academy Australia (FAA), a light aircraft pilot training business, faces special challenges with instructors and students from a wide range of backgrounds.

In a Zoom talk on 13 September, Ben will discuss his approach and actions that could be applied equally to other small companies wanting to refresh and strengthen their safety management systems.

Ben found it was important to customise and go beyond safety templates, creating safety management systems with performance indicators and responses tailored to his workplace. "We're now more action-oriented and proactive," he explains. "This is giving me useful data to measure what's working."

He will also talk about a range of OHS issues that can be problematic for small businesses, including the loss of 'safety corporate memory' when people leave.
