What: Reducing manual handling injuries

Who: Conor Healy, Manager, Work Health and Safety, Jetstar Australia New Zealand

Details: Manual handling injuries are some of the most common and costly injuries in the workplace.

An account of how Jetstar Airways reduced these injuries by 40% will be shared by Conor Healy, Manager, Work Health and Safety, Jetstar Australia New Zealand in a lunchtime presentation on 10 April.

Baggage handlers, cabin crews and engineering workshop teams all do a lot of manual handling at Jetstar, which now has 7,000 employees and is one of the world's fastest growing airlines.

Conor developed a multi-pronged program to reduce manual handling injuries and the risk of musculoskeletal disorders for employees working in body stressing environments. In two years he has found that the program has already made a significant difference.

He will discuss the program and what the airline is doing to continue to gain improvements in this area.
